A sandwich enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay for detection of ataxia telangiectasia mutated protein with antibody against GST-mammalian ataxia telangiectasia mutated protein fusion protein. We have developed a sandwich enzyme-linked immunosorbent assay (ELISA) using a monoclonal antibody (mAb) against a glutathione S-transferase (GST)-mammalian ataxia telangiectasia mutated (mATM) protein fusion protein as a detection reagent. Two mAbs were prepared from hybridomas obtained by fusion of splenocytes from a BALB/c mouse immunized with the GST-mATM protein fusion protein. One mAb

was raised against GST-mATM protein fusion protein, and the other was raised against GST protein. A quantitative sandwich ELISA was established for detecting the ATM protein by using the two mAbs. ATM protein was detected in extracts from various human tumor cell lines, and the level of ATM protein was correlated with the sensitivity of these tumor cell lines to ionizing radiation. We propose that this ELISA may be useful in clinical and experimental immunodiagnosis.
