Signaling in the initiation of mitosis. The cell cycle begins with the destruction of the old chromatin that accompanies the assembly of a new set of chromosomes. Because the chromatin structure is so different in interphase and mitotic cells, it is clear that the signals that trigger mitosis must also be different. Recent work indicates that new mRNAs may mediate these signals. Moreover, these messages may function through the cyclin-dependent kinases to produce the mitotic phenotype.

Clonidine inhibition of prolactin secretion in vivo and in vitro: effect of bromocriptine pretreatment. This study examined the effect of clonidine on basal and bromocriptine-stimulated serum PRL secretion in rats. Clonidine administration resulted in a dose-dependent inhibition of PRL release during administration of bromocriptine (1 microgram/rat). This inhibition was reversed by naloxone. Intravenous infusion of clonidine (50 micrograms/rat/h) blocked the normal surge of PRL seen after the administration of bromocriptine. This inhibitory effect on PRL secretion was reversed by naloxone. Clonidine alone had no effect on basal PRL secretion. These studies demonstrate that clonidine inhibits PRL secretion when the dopamine receptor antagonist bromocriptine is administered and that clonidine can also block the in vivo secretion of PRL induced by dopamine agonists.
