Mindful is a mental health app that can be used to detect, assess, and treat the early warning signs of depression. It provides a personalized experience that matches the unique experience of a user's symptoms and needs. Mental health issues are emerging as one of the leading causes of disability. They are estimated to affect over 5.8 million people in the US alone — more than 2.2% of the population. According to the American Association of Community Psychiatrists, most psychiatrists do not know about 10% of the depression patients they treat. Only 40% of patients who visit a mental health professional are diagnosed with depression. Therefore, Mindful is the first app that can address these issues, becoming a powerful tool for clinicians and patients. This is why Mindful aims to provide those who are impacted by depression with the world's first clinically validated mindfulness app. Mindfulness is more than a concept, but a way of being. That is why there is no definition of mindfulness. It is a state of being that comes from paying attention to the present moment, as well as accepting our thoughts and feelings with compassionate awareness. In this way, mindfulness has a great potential to transform one's life. Mindfulness can be used to detect and assess symptoms of depression, such as feeling sad, isolated, frustrated, or anxious, and to provide patients with the tools needed to overcome their symptoms. This is done through four major components: 1. Insight Tracking The user generates a self-reported diary of thoughts and mood throughout the day by answering three simple questions. This can help the user learn about their experiences and build up a deeper understanding of the effects of their thoughts on their mood. 2. Insight and Distress Tracking This feature helps the user to identify the changes in his or her mood that can indicate symptoms of depression. By recording these changes, it may be possible to identify early warning signs of depression. The tracker also allows the user to share information with loved ones or clinicians on a social network to create a safety net for them. 3. Insight Challenges The user has the opportunity to complete a series of mindfulness and depression-related challenges. These challenges use the insight tracking feature to help the user practice mindfulness and monitor changes in the user's mood. The app features 10 different challenges that can help the user: - Recognize stress - Listen to thoughts and feelings - Maintain focus - Mindfulness for food - Concentration for exercise - Well

Franklin Street/Humboldt County @Largest Solar Project in the U.S. Munster is huge! In 2016, a new 150,000-panel solar farm will be built on land adjacent to the city's wastewater treatment plant (WWTP). The project is the largest solar farm in the U.S. Once completed, the solar farm will generate an estimated 500,000 megawatt-hours of clean energy annually. Since Munster's WWTP creates tons of nitrogen-laden wastewater that must be disposed of, the N.Y. Department of Environmental Conservation (DEC) designated the project as an "Advanced Wastewater Treatment Facility" (AWTF). The UK is doing a bit of last-minute bargain shopping for a new jet engine, the Viper, that could give the Typhoon IV a serious run for the money in the future. The Viper engine family is still in the early development phase and certification is likely several years away, but the British defense ministry recently issued a short-notice request for proposals to develop the engine, which will replace the SeaLord V12 on the Typhoon IV. Three small UK-based contractors - Castle Bromwich, Cotswold - have applied to the task, and are looking for a slice of the pie worth up to £4 million ($5 million) to start. The "agent of change" process is about to start, with selected vendors then invited to submit concrete cost and performance proposals. At the end of the process, a winner will be picked and the first customer lined up. But even if the project is successful, this is unlikely to be the last time the UK will need to get a leg up on foreign buyers. But just what would a Viper engine look like, and how would the power be generated? The Typhoon IV will mark the entry of the Typhoon family into service with the RAF's F-35B Joint Strike Fighter, and currently uses engines from the Rolls-Royce/Pratt & Whitney F136. The Typhoon IV is a twin-engine, twin-fuselage aircraft, with a mixed powerplant (Jensen-Clark ducted fan plus Rolls-Royce or a General Electric T700 turbofans) and
